William Davies an American poet and singer by the means of his poems explains the biggest problem of today's life. Each and every individual is so occupied and busy with their day to day work, to achieve the larger objectives in life that they forget to notice the smaller things in life and the happiness they can derive out of these smaller things. The beauty of nature for example is essential to be noticed. But today nobody, has the time to stop for a minute also. All we are interesting in is conducting our daily jobs and work.
